Research

Associate Professor Anna Angelin, Lund University is a social welfare and policy researcher. Her main competence and areas of publication are consequences of unemployment, financial stress, marginalization and welfare benefit dependency. Her research also focus on how Human Service Organizations handle and process these citizens in need of welfare services. The research projects she has conducted have mainly used multiple methods, both qualitative and quantitative. The doctoral dissertation on the subject of youth unemployment was published in 2009 and contained both 74 in depth interviews, survey based comparative analyses and longitudinal analyses of official register based data. After her PhD Angelin was awarded a full research Post doc position by the Faculty of Social Sciences Lund University. Professor Angelin has continued her research in a quantitative comparative 4 year long Nordic project on unemployment and financial difficulties among young adults. In collaboration with Professors Håkan Johansson and Max Koch she received a grant from EU 7th Framework Programme for the three year European research project " COPE, Combating Poverty in Europe Re-organising Active Inclusion through Participatory and Integrated Modes of Multilevel Governance"(2012-2015). The COPE research studied EU member states approaches to combating or reducing poverty and exclusion especially focusing on the development and provision of active inclusion policies, how do public, private and non-governmental organizations and actors deal with the challenges raised by the need for closer cooperation between different political levels (European, national, regional and local) involving all relevant stakeholders (public, private, organised civil society and citizens) across the boundaries of formerly separated societal fields (social, employment and economic policy). In 2011 and 2012 Angelin worked on "The Commission for a Socially Sustainable Malmö" with research on reduction of child poverty. Professor Angelin was also Head of Reserach for Lund University Economic Security Institute (EconSec) from 2013-2016 where she led the research activities and grant application work. EconSec is a cross-disciplinary research institute focusing on studies of the impact on economic security for individuals and society related to the increasing use of credit and debts as well as how public Human Service Organizations are handling this complex issue.

Professor Angelin is living in Riyadh since almost three years where she have been working part-time as a consultant for The World Bank with research on youth employment focusing on creating evidence-based policies for increased youth and female employment in Saudi Arabia. Currently she is at the ending phase of working as a consultant in a World Bank study on reforming the social policy and protection systems in KSA. The vast majority of Angelins research projects have been financed through several external grant applications.

Teaching

Professor Angelin have been employed at the School of Social Work, Lund University since 2000 and have been teaching and supervising on various courses and levels for example extensive experience of supervising Bachelor and Master thesis students as well as lecturing and examining courses on organizational theory, social inclusion, cultural understanding, scientific methodology, psychology, functioning of Human Service Organizations etc. The Department educates social workers that work in a broad range of occupations from case workers to HR- management. Professor Angelin is also supervisor for doctoral student Jayeon Lindelee. In 2013 she was head of the doctoral introductory course at School of Social Work Lund University and was also heading and developing an explorative and innovative course at this department where service users are included as students and study together with social work students in developing innovative entrepreneurial projects and enhancing performance of Human Service Organizations. The presence of the service users enables a wider perspective and understanding of service users own voice and experiences in relation to creating best practices. In a collaboration with School of Social Welfare, University of California, Berkeley Professor Angelin have in 2015 published an article on this in "Journal of Evidence-Informed Social Work" and have also been invited to Berkeley to present this methodology and research. Professor Angelin is also working for Lund University during her stay in KSA with research and teaching on Undergraduate, Master and PhD level courses (primarily on-line based web courses).
